Retake 2 Of 4 Escapees; Another Said Drowned

Two of four men who seized a pick-up truck at knife-point and crashed it through a fence to escape from Fort Pillow Prison Farm about 1:30 p.m. Tuesday were recaptured just before midnight near Sullivan's Camp on Cold Creek.

James Campbell, 19, of Lebanon, and Ralph McDonald, 37, of Centerville, said a third escapee, Sherman Robinson, 21, of Murfreesboro, drowned when a boat in which they attempted to cross the Mississippi River sank. The fourth escapee, Richard Ware, 23, of Jasper, was believed at noon Wednesday to be surrounded near Sullivan's Camp.

McDonald, who dislocated an elbow and suffered cuts when he fell during the chase, was sent to City of Memphis Hospital.

When A. D. Cross, prison employee, was delivering milk to the prison's kitchens in the Chevrolet pick-up, the four men held a knife on him and ordered him to drive them out of the prison grounds.

Cross refused but tossed the men the keys to the truck.

They drove the truck through a wire fence at the prison and also through gates on the Frank Keefe property at Fulton Landing before making their attempt to cross the Mississippi River.

Fort Pillow Park Supt. Robert Henry restricted entry to the park until the search ended.

McDonald was serving a life term for second degree murder. Ware life for robbery with a deadly weapon, Campbell ten years for armed robbery, and Robinson 65 years for carnal knowledge of a female under 12.

Man, 22, Drowns In Boat Accident

The body of Gary S. Mauldin, 22, of Covington, an employee of Colonial Fiber Co. there, was recovered Saturday from Cold Creek at Sullivan's Camp.

Sheriff's officers said a witness told them Mauldin was alone in a 14-foot boat with a small motor when it struck an object in the water and he went overboard Friday afternoon.

Services were Monday in Covington. He leaves a wife and daughter.

Thirteen Accept Martin Degrees

Thirteen Lauderdale County students received degrees from the University of Tennessee in Martin Thursday last week.

Lelon O. Edwards, Jr., of Ripley, took his bachelor of science degree in chemistry with high honors, Mary Emily Garner, of Ripley, her bachelor of science degree in education with high honors, and Donna Noblin Pugh, of Halls, her associate of arts degree in nursing with honors.

Bachelor of science degrees in education went to Debra Ann LaRoche, William "Sonny" Paschall, and Jimmy Larry Smith, of Ripley, and Donald Keith Ashmore and Gary Lynn Jennings, of Halls.

Bachelor of science degrees in business administration went to Michael O'Neal Newman, Stanley Lewis Paige, and William Andrew Pollard, of Ripley, and Timothy Ray Belton, of Halls.

Will Andrew Lewis, of Henning, earned a master of science degree in education.

Royce Hilliard Publishes Text

Royce Hilliard, of Margate, Fla., son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hilliard, of 276 Anthony, Ripley, is author of the textbook, "You And Your World," being published by Youth Education Press, 6110 Royal Palm Road, Margate, Fla., 33063.

The book, suitable for use in social science, science, home economics, and other departments is the result of seven years of research and preparation by the author, who edited a weekly and was copy editor for a daily newspaper before the last decade spent teaching in Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Mr. Hilliard took a bachelor of science degree from Iowa State University, a master of arts degree from the University of Miami, and a master of education degree from Florida Atlantic University.

He resides in Margate with his wife and three children. He and his wife are leaving June 20th for a month in the Far East.

Orders for the book, at $5 post-paid, may be sent to the publishers after Aug. 1st.

Jim Pattersons Leaving Ripley

Jim Patterson, purchasing agent of Universal Electric Co. s Ripley plant since its construction in 1960, is being promoted and transferred to purchasing operations at the firm's main plant in Owosso, Mich.

He and his wife, Phyllis, came to Ripley as part of the original management team from Owosso. He is the last to leave.

The Pattersons have been active in civic affairs, and Jim has served as president of Ripley Rotary Club.

Patterson is scheduled to assume his new duties in Owosso not later than Aug. 1st.

Soc. Security Advice In Mid-Town Center

A Social Security Administration representative who visits Ripley from the Dyersburg office each Friday from 9:30 a.m. until noon has acquired new quarters in Mid-Town Center on South Washington.

Inquiries may also be made to the Dyersburg office by telephoning 234-9633, without toll.

MRS. GANELLE McBRIDE, of Ripley, a student in the genealogy course, found rich family history only a generation before her. Many yellowed newspaper clippings tell of her father, Louis Bonaparte Nelson, a slave who accompanied Gen. E. R. Oldham through four years of Civil War. He was at Shiloh and ate mule meat during the siege of Vicksburg. He remained with the Oldhams 12 years after the war and was Ripley Grammar School janitor 25 years—never failing to attend a Confederate re-union, even in Tampa, Fla.

Beef Fund Vote Set; Bureau Fights Plan

Livestock producers who want a check-off plan for beef like those in effect for cotton and soy beans are facing determined opposition from the state's largest organization of farmers, the Tennessee Farm Bureau.

The state Bureau is bucking the American Farm Bureau Federation, one of ten organizations in the National Beef Development Task Force, which is pushing for passage of the check-off in voting in July.

Voting delegates to the state Bureau's annual meeting in December voted overwhelmingly to oppose compulsory check-off programs. But Lemmy Wilson, president of the Tennessee Livestock Association and a third generation Farm Bureau member, says he can't understand "why Tennessee has the only state Farm Bureau that is negative about the plan."

He says any farmer can get his contribution back by asking for it.

"The average check-off will be less than half the cost of one worm pill for an 800-pound steer," he says—"about $1.20."

"This self-help program was designed for cattle producers by cattle producers," says Frank Ingraham, Nashville attorney who operates a cattle farm in Williamson County.

"If we're ever going to take charge of our industry and do something positive to improve our balance sheet, the time is now," he thinks.

The referendum is authorized by a federal law called the Beef Research and Information Act.

Passed by Congress last May, the law authorizes a national research and information program for the stated purpose of improving, maintaining and developing markets for cattle, beef, and beef products. Those eligible to participate in the referendum are producers who owned either beef or dairy cattle during the calendar year of 1976.

All cattle producers are being urged to register. This must be done at the local ASCS office, either in person or by mail, between June 7 and 17. Voting will then be held July 5-15, and only those who register will be allowed to vote. For the referendum to pass, fifty percent of those who registered must vote, and two-thirds of those voting must vote in favor.

The rate of deduction would be 0.3 percent for the first three years of the program. This would generate around $40 million annually, say the proponents of the legislation. What they fail to point out, however, say opponents, is that after three years, the 0.3 per cent can be raised to 0.5 percent without a further referendum of producers. This could cost over a $100 million annually based on 1973 cattle marketings. Also based on 1973 cattle marketings, the 0.5 percent deduction would take over $1.5 million from the pockets of Tennessee cattle producers.

There is a provision in the program for refunds, and this is why proponents claim that the program is not compulsory. However, any refund request by producers must be made within 60 days after the end of the month in which the cattle were sold. This will require most producers to request refunds four times per year if they want all of their money back.

Since the deduction is made on each head of livestock each time the animal is sold, the program becomes very complicated, particularly when producers want to request a refund. They must be able to establish satisfactory proof that they paid the assessment, according to the rules printed in the Federal Register.

The rules and regulations regarding the Beef Research and Information Act take up 16 pages of small type in the Federal Register.

Opponents of the check-off plan point out that the real problem in the beef industry is one of over-supply and not lack of consumption.

They also point to figures that show similar check-off plans for other agricultural commodities have not resulted in increased consumption. For example, a dollar-a-bale check-off on cotton was established in 1967. Cotton's share of the total fiber market has declined at a faster rate since the check-off began than it did in the six year period prior to 1967.

Opponents also express concern that mandatory check-off programs at the producer level shift the financial burden of research and advertising squarely on the shoulders of producers and away from other segments of the industry. The collections will be made on the value-added concept. However, the value added in the processing, distribution and retail chain will not be subject to the check-off. This is the segment of the beef industry that has historically assumed the primary responsibility for advertising.

The current Secretary of Agriculture, Bob Bergland, said recently that he was in favor of a checkoff to finance research and consumer information activities, but not for advertising. Therefore, he said that if he were a cattle producer, he would vote "no."

Thrips Found In Soy Beans

By Charles T. Peal

Thrips were found this week in soy beans, and controls may soon be needed, although thrips are not uncommon pests and in most years have populations too low to justify insecticide treatment to protect the soy bean crop.

Thrip adults migrate from other crops, such as wheat and hay, and from certain weeds into soy bean fields.

There they feed on plant sap, beginning rapid reproduction.

Thrips feeding on beans three inches or smaller pose a threat of plant stunting.

To sample a field, pull at least 50 plants at random and shake each plant into a wide container. Count the number of thrips and divide by 50.

If an average of two thrips per plant is found on beans up to three inches tall, treatment with Methyl Parathion, Sevin, or Toxaphene is advised.

Pecan Trees Attacked

Many home owners have telephoned the county Extension office about galls covering pecan leaves and twigs.

Many have not seen them before, but others have found them common for several years.

This problem is caused by an insect laying its eggs on the leaves and the area around the fruit—resulting in nature forming a case over the eggs.

Inside the case, the eggs develop. When the case ruptures, small adults emerge to start a new life cycle.

This damages the fruit but does no permanent damage to the tree.

In past years, it was thought that this problem was associated with damp spring weather, but since this year is an exception, this is now in doubt.

Spraying for these insects can be quite a problem, because the residual effect of the insecticide may not coincide with the egg-laying at the time the leaves are emerging—so it looks like a losing battle.

Killing Crab Grass

George Mosley, of Ripley, is controlling crab grass in his lawn by using MSMA herbicide.

This material, applied at the rate of eight teaspoons in 2½ gallons of water to 1,000 square feet, will not only control crab grass, but also dallis grass, nutsedge, and wood sorrel.

There will be little or no injury to Bermuda grass.

Complete control will usually require two applications—the second one 10 to 14 days later.

Let 'Em Eat Coyote

While conservationists have been priding themselves on the fruits of their "save the coyote" campaign, consumers found their 1974 expenditures for lamb and sheep products upped by $10,000,000.

Direct losses from coyote depredation hit sheep-raising farmers and ranchers even harder, with an 8% loss of the lamb crop and 2.5% loss of the sheep crop—a loss of about $27,000,000.

These financial contributions to wild-life preservation probably went unused.

On Vacation

By the time this issue of The Halls Graphic reaches our readers Nell and your editor along with Paul and Virginia Avery will have left for a few days of vacation in some of the western states. We have no definite itinerary but hope to tour Carlsbad Caverns, see the Grand Canyon, visit Salt Lake City, and the Rocky Mountains. Since we will not be here for the next issue of the Graphic, we hope that those of you who have items or news for that issue will call Mrs. Charles Alsbrook, 234-7773, or just place the item in her mail box no later than Monday night. Advertisers, etc. should call The Lauderdale County Enterprise, 635-1771, no later than Tuesday morning. We will have arrived home in time for the paper the following week.

Let's Get Moving

In addition to the new water tank and water lines now under construction in Halls there are two other projects which should be of prime interest to every resident of Halls. First and most important is the proposed medical clinic. As all of us realize more and more Halls, a town of 2,500, has been without a full time doctor since the

THINK TWICE BEFORE PAYING FOR FREE SAMPLES

If you're a wise consumer, you'll think twice before paying a fee for anything that's free.

Recent magazine advertisements have offered free samples of cosmetics and drug products, points out LaVerne Farmer, University of Tennessee Extension family economist. But it's free for a fee, because all these offers require you to pay a postage and handling charge. "Look over the ad carefully and decide if you're interested in getting all the products shown," she suggests. "For example, if you only want two of the ten free samples, add up the total postage and handling charges you'll have to pay and decide if it's still a good deal. You might be able to buy small quantities of the same products at a discount store and actually save money."

For example, a small tube of brand name toothpaste and a trial size of a popular pain reliever might cost you 89 cents at the discount store. If cents at the discount store. If the postage and handling charges for the free samples are a dollar, plus your 13-cent postage stamp, you'd save 24 cents by buying the products yourself. And you'll probably have a larger quantity of the product to try.

death of Dr. John G. Olds three years ago and little progress has been made to correct this situation, although the coming of Dr. Angel on a parttime basis has been helpful. Several local citizens have worked long and hard to establish the health clinic with the result that it seems probable that the clinic will become a reality although some problems still exist. Those working to establish the clinic need the cooperation of every citizen and certainly needs this clinic. The second project and also an important one is the proposed city park. The site, a good one, has been chosen. Some money has been made available and other funds seem likely to be granted so establishment of the park seems imminent. Once again every citizen should be working for this park. Halls has a chance to make some progress so let's get moving!

HEROIN

"Snow, H, joy powder, horse, and junk" are just some of the terms used by addicts when referring to heroin. Long declared the most dangerous of all drugs, due to its extremely addictive character, heroin has been completely abandoned by the medical profession and is illegal to manufacture, possess, sell, transport, import or use. Chronic addiction to the drug has been known to occur in a matter of days with some people, and the oftentimes unsuspecting addict is then faced with the financial dilemma of supporting his very expensive habit, necessary now to maintain proper balance over his body's natural processes.

QUIET DIET REVOLUTION HAS REACHED LAUDERDALE COUNTY...

But is creating a loud noise in communities recently introduced to NaturSlim. Brenda Cates, of Crain's Pharmacy, lost 10 pounds in only two weeks. Mrs. Billie Taylor, of Trimble, lost 20 pounds. Elizabeth Cole, of Bolivar, lost 17 pounds. Pharmacist Sam Baras, of Memphis, lost 32 pounds. Pharmacist John Casey, of Memphis, lost 21 pounds, and Marilyn Ratliff, of Memphis, lost 29 pounds—all in only one month.

can of NaturSlim provides two satisfying, high-protein meals daily for a whole month (for only 33¢ a meal) and allows the user to eat a complete, well-balanced meal for dinner. Extracts, honey, etc., may be added to the shakes, according to taste. The unusual part of the program, says Mr. Steele, is that there are almost no restrictions on the third meal of the day, which can consist of many of the so-called "forbidden foods." Mr. Steele feels that another reason the program has had such a tremendous response is that there are no weekly meetings—no weighing in, no criticism from an instructor and no fees or penalties. No wild promises of overnight miracles—just healthy, believable results, without starving. Although sold in the Northeast for almost nine years, this is the first time NaturSlim has been available on a wide scale in this area.

They are living proof that NaturSlim really works, if you are sincere about losing weight.

Since October, literally thousands of Tennesseans have experienced the benefits of NaturSlim, a 100% natural program which, unlike so many around, requires no meetings to attend, no exercises, no drugs or shots, and, best of all, no hunger pangs. According to Mr. Wardlaw Steele, representative for the program, the key to the program is a powder used to make a variety of milk shakes. A one-pound

Dixie Bobber Rig Takes Steelheads

By Tony Mack
Daylight comes early at River's Inlet—about 5 a.m. And shortly thereafter, guests are roused from a deep and peaceful sleep by the resounding voice of guide Mark Lawrence: "Rise and shine, you lunker trout fishermen. Breakfast and fish are waiting." By 7 a.m., the party has chowed down, split into two 4-man groups, and again headed up the picturesque Kibella and Chuck-walla rivers.

"Today is my day to do battle with the big steel-heads," I tell myself. For two days previously, I have of the others and their fishing. Actually, I have managed to get a hook slightly, but my efforts were futile. Not because of the fish, but rather my inexperience with the customary methods and terminal tackle used.

Far Northwest steelhead use steelhead roe, eggs, extracted from the previous day's catch for bait. A dozen or so eggs are placed into a 1½ inch square of red nylon mesh, such as bridal veil or cheesecloth, and tied into a sack about the size of a strawberry.

This sack is used on rigging that closely resembles that used by river catfishermen in the South. One eye of a 3-way pigmy tube swivel is tied to the line. A 15-inch leader, terminated with a No. 5 or 6 hook, is tied to a second eye, and onto the third eye of the swivel, a 3-inch doubled length of monofilament is added. A two-inch pencil weight is crimped onto this to keep the bait on bottom.

Rex Gerlach had fished for steelheads for years in the State of Washington, before our trip, so it was he who attempted to explain to this novice the tactics of steelheading the Kibella River.

"Cast the bait slightly upstream, let the current bounce it along the rocks, and hold your rod-tip high. Set when you feel something kinda different," he said.

I was reasonably sure that I knew how the "something different" would feel. Twenty-five rods of bass fishing has to teach any fisherman a little about the feel of game fish, whatever the species.

So upstream I waded, confident that the simple procedure and my expert "feel" would earn me a limit of choice trout, pronto. I cast the egg sack out as Rex had directed and held the rod-tip high, feeling the surge of white water move the bait a few yards.

Abruptly, "something different" made the line hesitate, and I promptly set the hook—sinker and all—into what surely must have been the largest snag in the Kibella.

And for the remainder of the day, I set the hook on at least 200 imaginary fish strikes, while going through about $30 worth of rigging.

Naturally, I was in for a good bit of guffaw from my fellow fishermen at camp that night, especially since all the others had trout in the freezer at ready.

"What's all this business, we've heard about these natural-born fishermen down South," they ribbed. "Though no fish could outdo you count, try boys."

Later, in the guest quarters, Don Traeger came to my rescue.

"Try this tomorrow, Mack," he said, handing me a piece of styrofoam that had a different rigging wrapped around it.

"I don't hang up half as much with this secret rig of mine, and I know I catch as many as you," he said.

And ironically, I had said several times the day before, "J. B., darned if I couldn't do better with a plain ole catfish rig like we use at home." He had agreed.

The other Canadians thought we were nuts. They'd already ribbed Don Traeger heavily about using a bobber. But in the back of my mind, I knew this guy knew something they didn't. There are times when the simplest tackle going proves to be the best. Tomorrow would tell.

The next morning, our entire party decided to fish together instead of splitting up. Back against the current, upstream, I totally expected my fish to head in the opposite direction, and this split-second error in judgement and line pressure were costly.

The line snapped with a loud ping, and my first trophy steelhead was gone.

Ted Loney wasn't sure if I knew how the fish actually showed me how these fish take the bait or whether it was sheer luck and I was simply in the right place at the right time.

But I knew, and inside of 15 minutes at the end of the day, two beautiful fish and lost still another.

Two fish per day is the steelhead limit in British Columbia, so my day was finished early. Back at the campfire down stream, my seven companions congratulated me, and since none of them had caught a fish so far this day, I was promptly cornered by Don Traeger and talked him out of every "Southern" bobber rig in his tackle sack.

J. B. Harrod's bass spinner-baits wouldn't do the trick. And the fellows who tried fly-fishing had similar success.

But when the final tallies were made at the end of our journey, everyone came home with fish.

Don Ellis put the icing on an already tasty cake by landing a beauty that weighed a whopping 19½ pounds on Johnny Buck's scales.

It was the largest steelhead caught this year at River's Inlet—quite a record to bring to a close a trip that will long be remembered by all of us.

JET-BOATS TAKE ANGLERS in virgin forests of British Columbia up the Kibella River, against white-water current.

SOUTHERN 'BOBBER RIG' paid off for Enterprise columnist Tony Mack on big steelheads. This beauty exceeded 15 pounds.

Cockle Burrs Prove Pesky

By Charles T. Peal
Farmers are hard-pressed to control cockle burrs this year, since there was not enough moisture to activate pre-emergence herbicides. Although there are many chemicals in the arsenal, timing is critical. Hot weather and drought stress have burned young soy bean leaves. Farmers must plan carefully for each field.

Dyanap, Basagran Applied
Sam Williams, of Durhamville, began fighting cockle burrs in his soy beans last week by applying Dyanap over the top at the rate of two to four quarts per acre in eight to ten gallons of water per acre. This material effectively controls burrs and some other broad-leaf weeds under six inches tall.

In some fields, Williams is using Basagran, which will control burrs up to eight inches tall. Basagran—also applied over the top at the rate of 1½ pints per acre for smaller weeds—is one of the best materials available for this stage.

Basagran can be sprayed on soy beans at any age, provided they are growing. One problem with weed control here is that beans are in so many different growth stages—up to four in the same field.

Pugh Directing Spray
Eugene Pugh, of Halls, is prepared to direct his spray as well as use over-the-top applications. Directed spray has the advantage of hitting young cockle burrs and other weeds without damaging the bud of the soy bean plant, which somewhat delays maturity.

Cockle burrs need to be controlled in beans during the first six weeks of bean growth to prevent competition for moisture and plant food which will reduce yields.

Dry Month Predicted
Little drought relief is promised in the long-range weather outlook through July 1st issued by the National Weather Service office in Stoneville, Miss.

Monthly total rainfall for West Tennessee is predicted at 2½ to four inches, with above average temperatures. Soy bean fields not yet planted because of dry soil are not likely to be planted.

Shear White Pines
Many county home-owners have white pines on their lawns. To be successful, these trees need to be sheared during the last week in June.

Watch the new growth at the top of the tree—the "leader." There will be many lateral shoots of new growth, but they seldom grow as long as the leader.

Some leaders grow two to three feet a year. This is fine for commercial timber production, but for ornamental purposes, the leader should be cut back to 12 to 14 inches.

If you want a Christmas tree form, also clip the laterals. If shearing is omitted for a year or two, an empty space of three or four feet will appear between the whorls of the branches, and when this happens, it is too late to make corrections.

Hale's Point, Ashport Host Man, 34, On 2000-Mile Swim To New Orleans

By Terry R. Ford
Wielding a water-proof camera, sipping fruit juices and Pepsi-Cola, and singing to pass the time, a 34-year-old Portland, Ore., insurance agent, kicking his flipper-clad feet, floated into view in the Mississippi River off Hale's Point last Friday on a 2,000-mile swim to New Orleans, La., to lay claim to two world records.

Wayne Thompson, who began his swim May 7th by plunging into the Missouri River at Yankton, S.D., says he is the first person to have swum the Missouri. And if he makes New Orleans by the Fourth of July, as planned, he says his 2,000-mile swim will top a current record of 1,876 miles in 176 days, set in 1931.

Using a breast stroke or floating on his back and kicking his feet, he covers about 35 miles a day. The current normally moves him along at three to five miles an hour, and his efforts add about a mile to that. Low river stages and sluggish water have been his major problems. Thompson in providing very little current. Cockle burrs have been chilly water—in day's high 80s at Hale's Point—and temporary blindness from chemicals in the water at Sioux City, Iowa. The fish have had their problems.

"I have a terrible voice," Thompson says. "My singing has made carp tummy up and belly up and expire." His method of travel may seem leisurely, but he compares the daily effort to walking 25 miles, or swimming for eight to ten hours in a pool.

He is met each evening by John Griffin, 51, of Portland, who travels in the van in which Thompson sleeps. One of the first things Thompson does when he gets out of the river is get back into water, in a shower.

Then he eats, rests, and checks the next day's route. His next stops after Hale's Point were Ashport and Richardson's Landing. Thompson says the trip has left him generally unaffected, physically or emotionally.

But he does have periodic nightmares of being caught in the river and run over by barges—a danger he must guard against constantly. He does not wear a life preserver, nor does a boat follow him. He's all alone out there in the river—except for his camera and a bag of quick energy bars, fruits juices, and Pepsi.

After New Orleans, what? Thompson and Griffin plan the longest canoe ride, a 5,000-mile trip in two months on a tandem bicycle, and, in 1981, a celebration of the anniversary of the signing of the Constitution by the greatest swimmer ever achieved by two people. Little wonder that the insurance man from Portland has been unable to obtain insurance.

Butterworth was alleged to have kicked Crowder's son, Jeffrey, in the leg, which was in a cast, as he was changing buses at the high school. Butterworth testified that he saw the boy atop what he took to be another boy and began shouting at him, when 12 to 14 feet away. He said his shouts were ignored and that when he bent over, the boy's elbow struck him in the stomach.

He said he reeled back, holding his stomach, and used his foot to separate the combatants. He denied this use was forceful or vicious. Revere also heard testimony from another instructor, Rudi Koob; the two bus drivers, Junior Ammons and J. W. Williams; and six students, including Sandra Marie Davis, 11, the daughter of Mrs. Carol Jean Wiseman, of Highland St., another Middle Grade student who was changing buses.

It was she from whom Butterworth separated Crowder. Her mother testified she suffered bruises and "was stiff for a week." The case was the first of two assault charges against teachers for which Whitaker obtained indictments from the county grand jury last week.

The other indictment charged Gerald Basham, third grade teacher in the Ripley Primary School, with beating Michael Carter with a belt. Mrs. Virginia Pettie, the boy's mother, says the belt accusation is inaccurate, that the boy was paddled.

Funds For Public Works Are Noted
U.S. Rep. Ed Jones says Lauderdale County is eligible for $150,000 and the City of Ripley for $134,000 in second round funding of the federal public works program, designed to combat unemployment.

The state gets $30,167,000. Rep. Jones' Seventh Congressional District is eligible for $3,401,000, he reports.

Drug Abuse Team Visits

Lauderdale County Drug Control will present a Drug Abuse Team from the Student American Pharmaceutical Association at 8 p.m. this Friday in Halls High School and at 8 p.m. Saturday in the Little Theater of Ripley High School.

Sheriff Joe B. O'Steen, Halls Police Chief Buddy Moore, and Ripley Police Chief Bob White will join in the programs. The presentations will identify drugs, effects, dangers, and problems in the county.

Information for reference will be provided those attending. Opportunity will be given for asking questions of the team. Children under 14 must be accompanied by an adult.

"Drug abuse has increased at a phenomenal rate during the last decade," says Mike Allmand, of LCDC. "Action to deal with this problem has lagged far behind."

"Many people can remember when drugs were virtually unknown in this county. Times have changed. We become more aware each day of the presence of drugs here."

"Before the people of a community, town or county can combat a growing drug problem, they must become knowledgeable about the effects and dangers of drugs."

"The average parent knows very little about drugs and how to little to educate his family and children about their dangers."

"The pusher is usually the person who provides the education. We owe it to our families and children to take the role of educator from the pusher. We take this opportunity to learn more about drugs."

Accused Teacher Found Not Guilty
Circuit Judge Herman L. Revere Monday found John H. Butterworth, a Ripley High School distributive education instructor, not guilty of assault and battery upon an 11-year-old Ripley Middle Grade School student.

Judge Revere heard the case brought by District Attorney General Mike Whitaker, of Commerce, on behalf of Cecil Crowder of Ripley, without a jury. J. H. Walker, Jr., and Jody Walker represented Butterworth.

Butterworth was alleged to have kicked Crowder's son, Jeffrey, in the leg, which was in a cast, as he was changing buses at the high school. Butterworth testified that he saw the boy atop what he took to be another boy and began shouting at him, when 12 to 14 feet away.

BLUES CRIER DIES

"SLEEPY" JOHN ESTES, 77, an immortal of what he called "the true-blue living blues," was buried Sunday in Durhamville Cemetery, a few miles from his birthplace in the farm country he loved and sang about and always wept back to, despite fame which put him on records, and took him to concert stages in Germany and Switzerland. He died June 5th, the day he was scheduled to begin a 2-week European tour.

Estes began playing for pennies on the streets of Brownsville at 13 but remained penniless most of his life and was blind for the last 17 years—an experience he described in one of his songs, "I'd Been Warned But I Didn't Take Heed In Time."

He teamed with Hammie Nixon, a harmonica player and jug blower, in 1920, and they traveled with Rufus "Tea-Tot" Payne, who later introduced Hank Williams to the guitar.

They also traveled briefly with Jimmy Rodgers, the "singing brakeman" of country music fame, who adapted some of their songs.

Estes and Nixon recorded in Memphis for Victor in 1929 and later recorded in Chicago and New York for Champion, Decca, and Bluebird.

"We hoboed and hitchhiked and walked to New York," he said. "We got to this toll bridge and didn't have a nickel to our name...but I hit a lick on that guitar, and the man said go ahead on."

He said he had performed in 47 states and at the prestigious Newport Jazz Festival. In his autobiography, "Big Bill" Broonzy cites Estes as one of the most important blues figures to appear in Chicago in the 1930-40s.

He especially praised Estes as one who "cried" in blues. Estes' chronic blood-pressure problems which caused him to fall asleep easily earned him his nick-name, a baseball injury cost him sight in one eye, and the other went in 1959.

His songs include "Brownsville Blues," "Floating Bridge," and "I Been Well Wanted."

Services were at 2 p.m. Sunday in Oakview Baptist Church.

He leaves his wife, Ola, of Brownsville; six children, Albert, Charles, Lucille, Mary, and Virginia, of Brownsville, and Willie, of Chicago; a brother, Samuel, of Chicago; and two sisters, Miss Lucille Estes, of Chicago, and Mrs. Adelle Taylor, of Detroit.

CLIFFORD CRAIG, Ripley policeman since 1962 and assistant chief since April, located Keever Barbee, his wife, and two children in their flaming home on Eastland at 11:29 p.m. Tuesday of last week, took a child in his arms, and kicked down a door to lead the family to safety before firemen arrived. The roof collapsed minutes later. No one was injured. "It was a courageous and highly professional performance," Mayor Rozelle Criner says, "and we are proud of this officer."

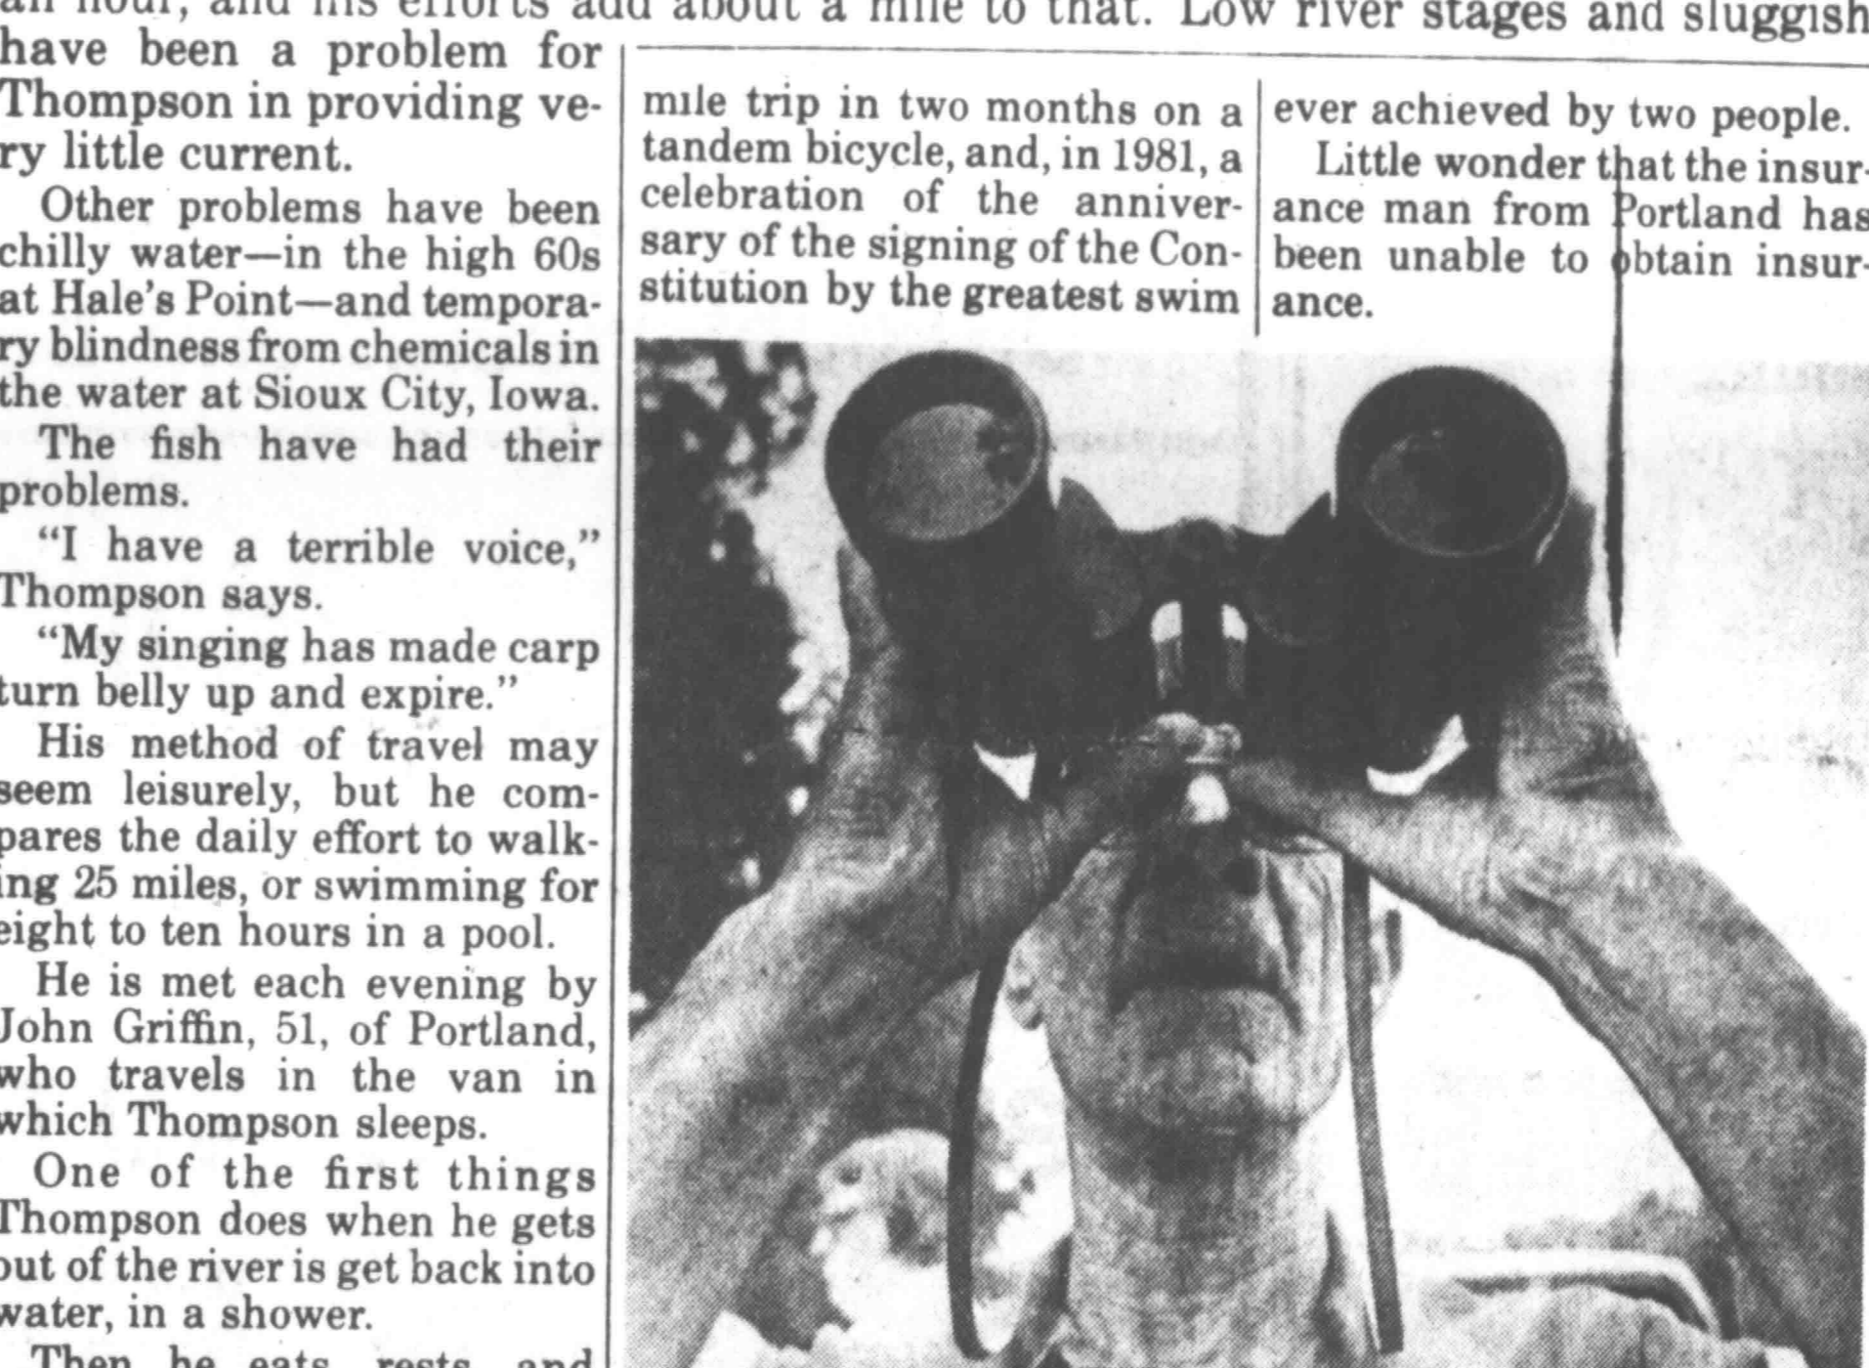

Prison Visitor Faces Charge
A visitor to Fort Pillow State Prison identified by Sheriff Joe B. O'Steen as Gregory E. DeGraw, 31, of Lauderdale County, Ala., was arrested Sunday and charged with possession of marijuana.

He was held under $500 cash bond.

Illegal Fishing Nets Big Fines
Joe and Tommy Townsen, Dyersburg brothers arrested June 2nd on the Forked Deer River and charged with illegal fishing, have been fined $140.25 each, including costs, by General Sessions Judge Willard Norvell.

Ken Dykes and Jeff Bailey, Jr., of the Wildlife Resources Agency, made the arrests.

ROBIN L. GITCHELL, son of the Harvey H. Gitchells, of Ripley, just graduated from pharmacy training at Shepard Air Force Base, Tex., is temporarily assisting Air Force Recruiter Clyde W. Kerr in the recruiting office at 1188 King Avenue, Dyersburg. After this duty, he will serve at Little Rock Air Force Base, Ark., and continue work toward a college degree.

9-Mile Rail Links Ripley, Dyersburg

The Illinois Central Gulf Railroad will install nine miles of continuously welded rail, weighing 136 pounds per yard, on its northbound main track between Ripley and Dyersburg this summer.

The railroad has just completed re-working ballast on both main tracks between Woodstock and Fulton, Ky.

This work was done with the track in place. A $665,000 machine built in Austria is in its second year of use by ICG for this task.

The 120-mile stretch it has covered south of Fulton since the first of the year is part of 300 miles it is scheduled to renovate this year.

The machine cuts into the rock ballast below cross-ties, sifts out foreign matter, and puts cleaned ballast back under the track for a firm, properly drained roadbed providing a smoother ride for passengers and cargo.

The track improvements in this area are included in the railroad's largest track budget in its history, $128,000,000 for the year.

Of that, about $15,000,000 is for new 136-pound rail and about the same amount for new cross-ties for the 13-state system linking Chicago, Ill., and Gulf Coast ports.

REPORTS FROM WASHINGTON

Last week, I had the opportunity to sit in on a meeting with Dr. James Schlesinger, President Carter's energy advisor. Dr. Schlesinger is expected to be appointed Secretary of Energy when the new Department of Energy is organized sometime later this year. He is proving himself a very articulate and candid spokesman for the President's energy goals, and his remarks were most informative.

One of the important aspects he touched upon was using fossil fuels for purposes that were most adaptive to their nature. For example, he pointed out that coal was a fuel that is best used in stationary circumstances such as steam plants, boiler fuel, and the like. Natural gas on the other hand is a very clean burning fuel that is readily accessible to homes and small businesses. Petroleum products, of course, are best suited for uses that fill our transportation needs.

Schlesinger stated that we should be moving in these directions within the next ten to fifteen years. In other words, our total effort toward energy conservation should also include efforts to convert certain uses of the various fuels for other purposes. There is, he feels, a need to utilize petroleum products for transportation, natural gas for home heating, and coal for boiler fuel for generating electricity.

In this way, the country could adapt the various fuels we have available more efficiently. This type of programmed conversion, of course, would get underway in the next ten to fifteen years.

As the Congress approaches the time when it begins consideration of the President's energy package, I feel that it is important to take a close look at what kind of action the Administration has in mind to reach its goals.

This kind of changes in our nation's transportation habits would be a big help to our efforts to conserve petroleum. It might also serve to help clean up pollution and smog that seems to plague cities of any size that experience large numbers of automobiles being used by workers commuting to and from work.

These kind of conversations with administration officials leave me with a very strong impression of those who are advising the President on energy matters. I think that it shows that the administration has specific actions in mind to back up their viewpoints and proposals on trying. It shows a real activism in energy, not an

Parties Honor Bride-Elect

Amy Baldrige, who will marry James Michael Robertson on June 25th, was celebrated with a series of parties during the weekend.

The home of Mrs. Charles Cherry on East Main was the setting Friday evening for a kitchen shower. Co-hostesses were Mrs. Wayne Vaden, Mrs. Bobby Steelman, and Mrs. Sammie Arnold.

The bride-elect wore white pants with a blue and white floral blouse and a Shasta daisy corsage, a gift from the hostesses who also gave her a crock pot and a basket holding a permanent arrangement of orange and yellow marigolds and artificial kitchen accessories. Each guest presented her with their favorite recipe.

The hostesses served thimbles of chicken salad, tons, mints, petit fours, and iced grape lemonade.

Special guests were the bride's mother, Mrs. Frank Baldrige, her grandmother, Mrs. Jim White, and her sister, Beth Baldrige.

On Saturday morning Mrs. Baldrige was honored with a Coke party in the home of Mrs. Robert Graddock on Circle Drive. Assisting Mrs. Graddock were her daughter, Miss Jan Craddock, Mrs. William G. Sprance, and her daughter, Mrs. William Brown.

For the event the honoree chose a black floral cotton suit and dress and pinned a gardenia corsage at her shoulder, a gift of the hostesses. They also presented her with a silver tray.

During the morning the guests made rice bags for the wedding and enjoyed an assortment of finger sandwiches, seafood dip, miniature cup cakes, and Cokes served from the dining table centered with an arrangement of Tropicana roses, white mums, and baby's breath.

Special guests were the mother and sister of the honoree. Other guests were Jackie Lanier, Phyllis Mullikin, and Carol Hilliard, of Dyersburg, and Paula Dunaway and Marti Hooper, of Halls.

Sunday afternoon Mrs. Jerry Puckett, Mrs. C. L. Burks, Mrs. Jack Henderson, Mrs. Harry Hughes, Mrs. Gilreath Dyer, and Mrs. Raybon Chambers complimented the bride-elect with a gift tea in the social parlors of the First United Methodist Church.

Off in a tulle dress of off-white, complemented by a daisy corsage from the hostesses, Mrs. Baldrige greeted the guests. Also in the receiving line were Mrs. Frank Baldrige and Mrs. Jim White.

 Illegal Abuse

The Narcotic Addict Rehabilitation Act of 1966 provides for the commitment, treatment and rehabilitation of narcotic addicts.

We have come a long way since the days of the "snake pit" treatment. Today our agencies provide help instead of imprisonment for addicts charged or convicted of a non-violent federal offense.

The addict must agree to the terms set by the National Institute of Mental Health, the United Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, and also by the Department of Justice.

Many more treatment facilities are becoming available across the nation on a combined federal and state basis. An addict not charged can commit himself for treatment by applying to the Surgeon General or can be committed by a responsible relative.

NIGHT FISHING TEMPTS wise anglers when ole Sol pushes shallow lake water temperatures far above those preferred by bass. Unable to see their prey at night, bass detect vibrations in water with black lines down their sides—fish "sonar"—and inner ears. Use noisy lures—popping plugs which churn their way atop the water; side-winding, double-bladed spinners which churn the surface, and sinking plugs which wobble violently as retrieved. Find the lure rhythmic to which fish respond, and follow the same cadence on each cast. Farm ponds are especially productive at night. Enterprise outdoors columnist Tony Mack finds a solid black "jitterbug" the best offering to make available under the moon.

Eye To Weather Can Keep Heat On Fish

By Tony Mack
The evidence of summer dog days was heavy, even in the early morning air, as guide David King and I labored through the buck brush north of Paris Landing on Kentucky Lake. We knew the bass were there somewhere, but finding them was another matter.

As we slowly traced a path through the vegetation, David concentrated on an electronic depth-finder, watching for signs of bait fish. Then, as we approached a sharp turn in an old creek bed that meandered through the area, there was a pronounced widening of the zero mark on the screen of the sonar unit. "Shad—and lots of them," David shouted as he cut the engine. "This may be the glory hole we've been searching for!" The water was 18 feet deep.

As the boat came to a stand-still, I dropped the probe of an electronic thermometer overboard and reeled off cable to the 20-foot mark. When I pressed the button activating the dial, the needle magically jumped to 70 degrees—perfect for black bass! The water at that depth was surely a lot cooler than on the surface, which had pegged 80 a few minutes earlier. I reeled up the meter probe as David kicked a brush anchor to a nearby bush on the bank of the invisible creek. Within minutes, a motor-oil colored plastic worm jiggled directly under the boat brought a tackle-bursting black skittering to the surface and into the waiting live well.

Three hours later, we had our limits of Kentucky Lake bass and hadn't moved more than 30 yards. Back at Buchanan's resort, we saw several fishermen as they were docking their boats. For the majority of them, it had been a fruitless morning. Why? Simply because they had neglected one of the all-important points which help account for the old adage that 10% of the fishermen catch 90% of the fish.

The successful 10% realize that different species of fish prefer different water temperatures and are most active in those preference zones. When the temperature that surrounds fish far exceeds their preference or tolerance, they go off their feed, become sluggish, and just won't cooperate with any tactic you use. When water temperatures fall below their preference level, they will not feed, but they will move and feed at peak levels, and fishermen can expect to come home with good catches.

Know the temperature preferred by the fish you are after, and do your fishing in water as close to this temperature as possible. Cover Is Important, Too Equally important, however, is deciding the more likely locations of any given species in any particular lake at certain times of the year. The temperature may be perfect, but if there is no cover, the fish just won't be there. I ran across a layman bass caster on Reelfoot Lake a few months back who serves as a good example.

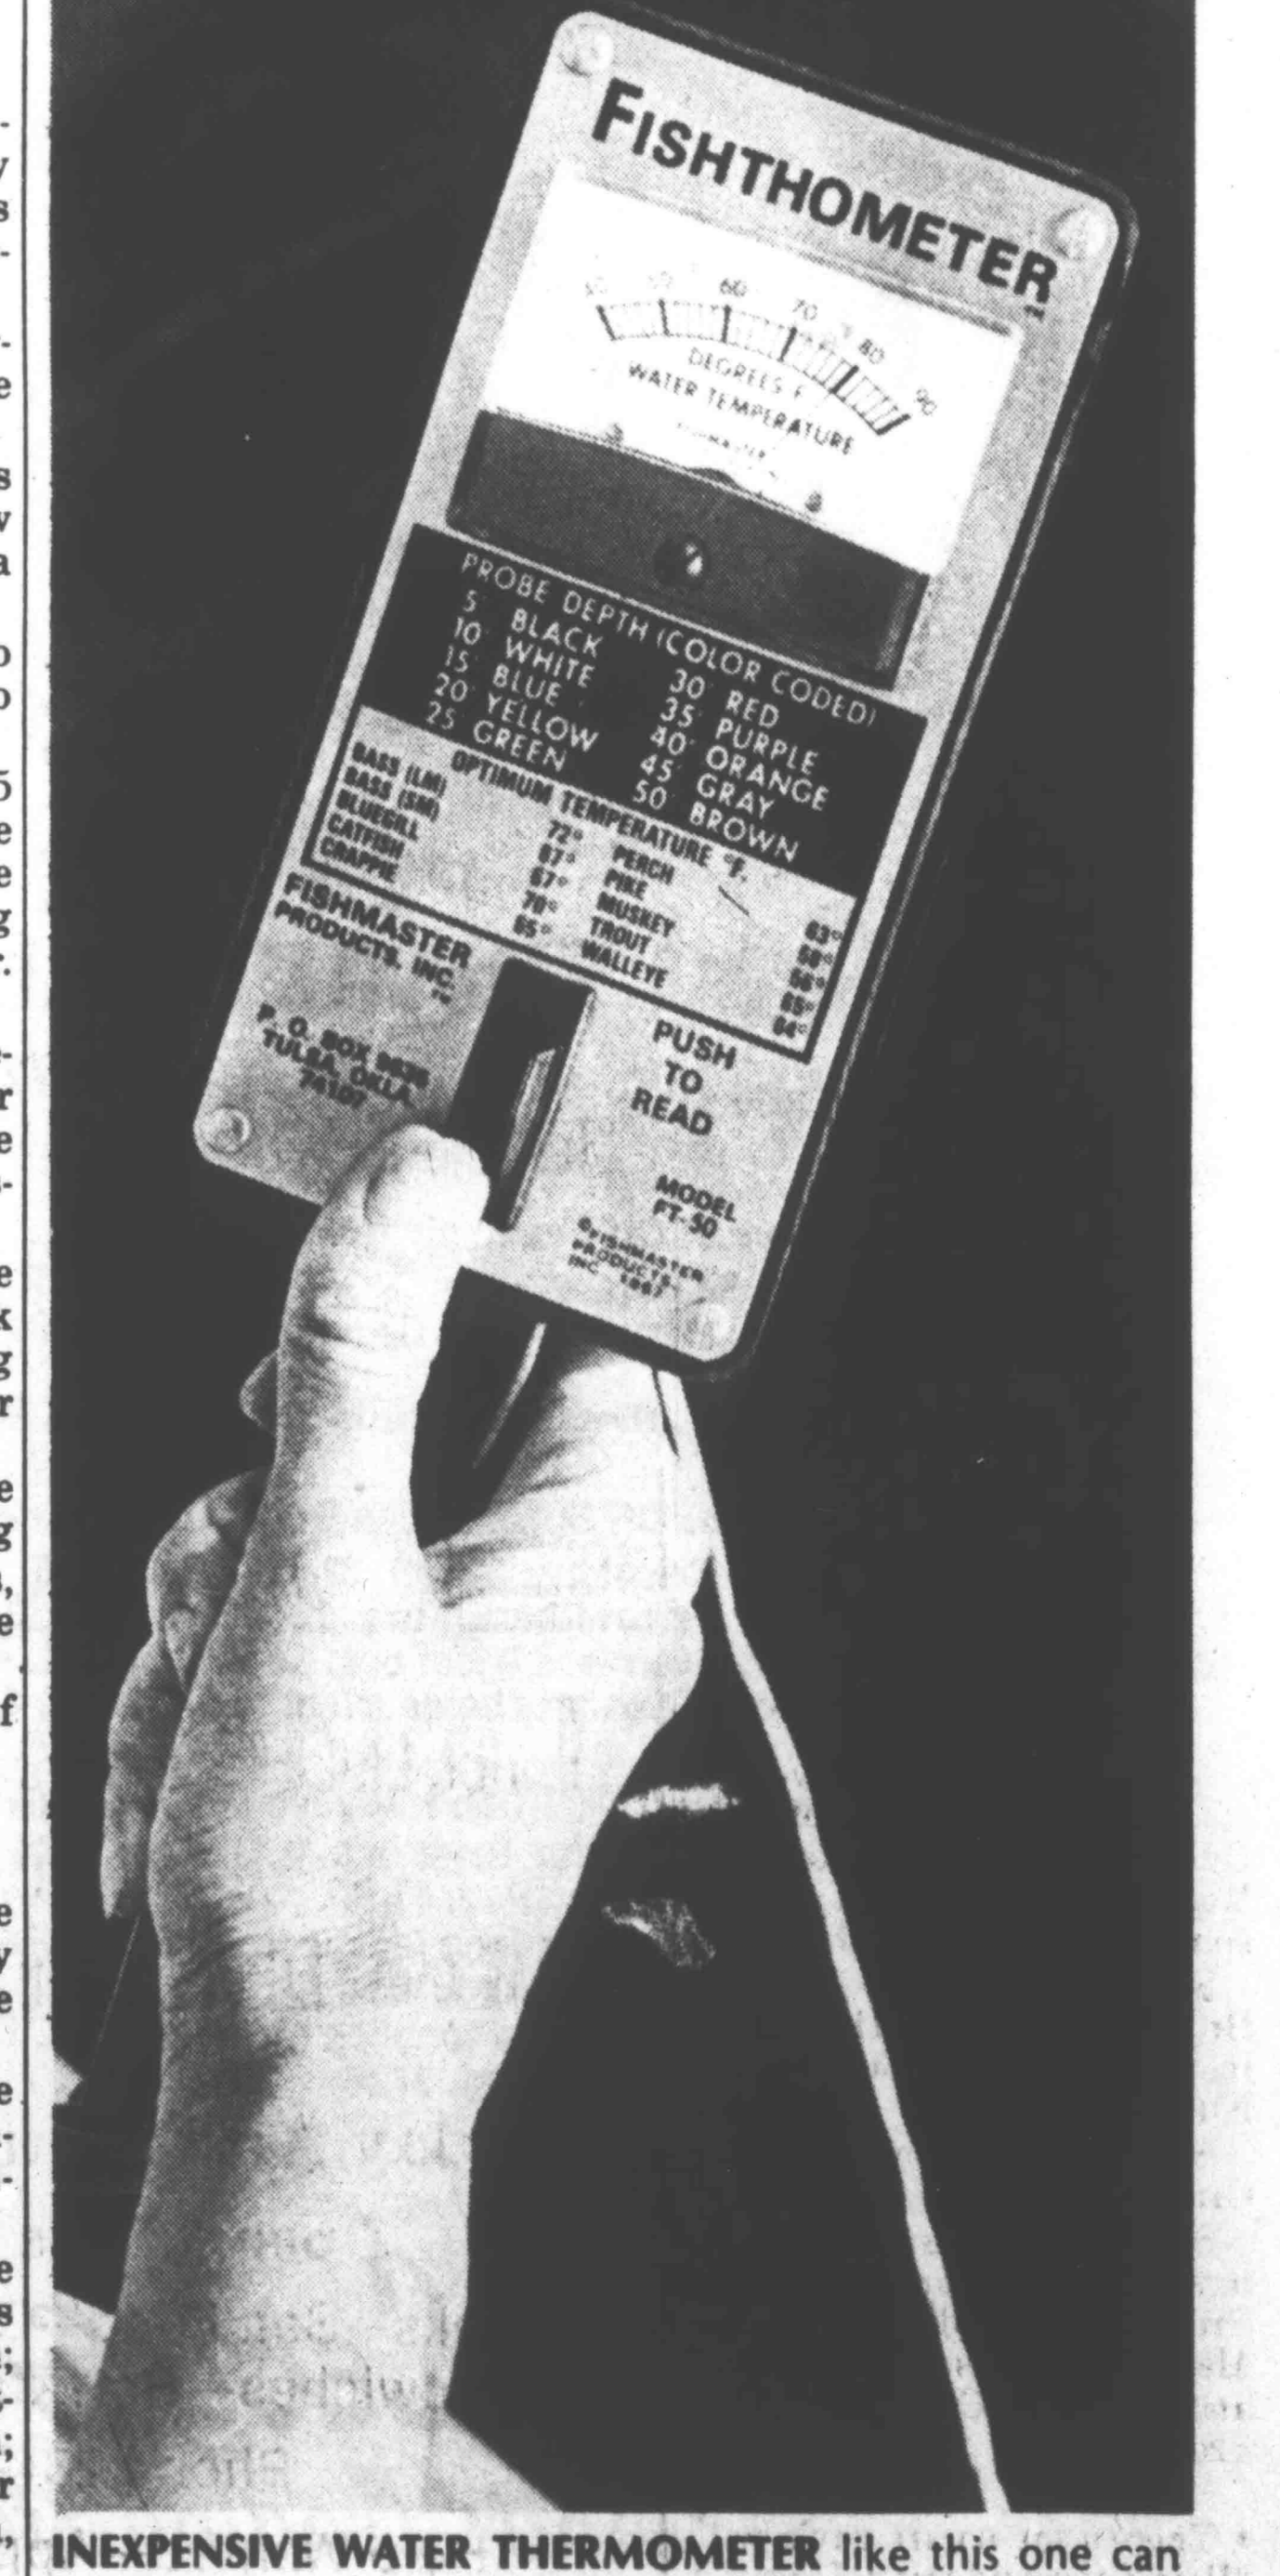

He was just learning how to search for bass according to temperature preferences. He was fully aware that 65 to 75 degrees was tops for ole line-sides, but somehow he dragged his feet on learning the types of neighborhood Mr. Bass desires. For a solid week, this energetic angler fished in open water areas of the lake, which were completely devoid of bass-holding structures.

And as the sun set in the west each day, he docked back at the marina with nothing more than a good sun-tan for his efforts. Although the temperature was right, he was not fishing the points, stumps, drop-offs, ridges, etc., which had the same right temperature. He was completely out of range of the fish.

Three Water Layers

Now let's assume you are fairly adept at picking likely fishing spots and go into the temperature theory more. In summer months, as the air warms the surface, the water in deeper lakes becomes divided into three layers. This happens because the warmer, lighter water remains on top—called the epilimnion; colder water sinks to the bottom—called the hypolimnion; and between them is the layer most important to fishermen, the thermocline.

The bottom layer of cold water usually has a very low oxygen content and therefore is devoid of bait fish. Remove the bait fish from any water, and you also remove the game fish. The epilimnion on top is usually too warm for game fish, though it will often be inhabited by predators and some species of smaller fish. During the night and early mornings, game fish will move and feed in this area, depending on whether or not the bait fish are there. This is why nights and early mornings produce good top-water bass action at times—as well as other species of fish—but generally, this action lasts only a short time, coming to an abrupt halt as the sun gets higher and the surface water becomes warmer. On cloudy or overcast days, top-water activity lasts longer, because the surface temperature is still tolerable to the fish.

INEXPENSIVE WATER THERMOMETER like this one can help a fisherman take advantage of the fact that different species of fish prefer different temperatures of water.

$2.30 Tax Rate Is Retained

Halls Board of Mayor and Aldermen passed on first and second reading Monday evening of a tentative budget retaining the present property tax rate of $2.30. Mayor Sammie Arnold noted that the present tax rate has not been raised in four years and also water and sewer rates have not increased during that period.

At the same time the board adopted a tentative budget of $816,200 with expected expenditures of $780,726.

A called meeting was set for 7 p.m. June 27th for third and final reading on the budget and the tax rate. A detailed item budget will be available at that time.

In other business the Board: Approved an 8% wage increase for city employees; approved setting city court cost at $7.50;

Voted to send Police Chief Buddy Moore and Patrolman Jimmy Garrett to the Police School banquet at Nashville.

Approved a gift of $75 to Halls Consolidated Park for purchase of baseball equipment;

Hired Grant Duke, of Nashville, for an additional 90 days to settle the proposal to re-open the air strip on the old air base;

Approved an increase of $45,000 for concrete and pilings for the new water storage tank;

Voted to purchase a new radio communications system at a cost of $4,500.

PADDLING WITH THE PRO

Called "paddle" by enthusiasts, platform tennis is similar to lawn tennis, but it's played with a 14-coupled paddle and a softer, sponge rubber ball. Like any sport, "paddle" requires skill and practice. Lucky youngsters in New York City got both as part of a 24-week training program at the Apple Platform Tennis Club.

taught by experts like Dick Squires, above. Sponsored by Uniroyal, maker of PRO-Keds, the training program was held in conjunction with the New York City Parks Department Junior Tennis Development Program. It's one way to get youthful athletes paddling in the right direction.

Nematodee Busy, Weevils Laggng

Nematodee—"worm-like" parasites which invade the roots of soy bean plants—made their way to Halls during the dry weather.

Stunted, yellow-green leafed plants above and with nematodes attached to roots of plants were found in fields throughout the county last week.

Though moist soil will tend to slow their activity, they may have severely damaged many untreated fields. Their destruction of roots results in small yields.

County farmers are combating this problem by applying a fumigant to the soil under the seed, allowing the root system to develop in a parasite-free zone.

Most farmers are now applying fumigants as a regular practice at $8 per acre for the material, plus costs of tractor and labor.

Where Are The Weevils?

James and Jimmy Criner are very happy about the fact that the over-wintered boll weevil population is practically non-existent at this point.

For many years, they have fought weevils in some of the fields they have near wooded areas.

They would be only too glad to get a good bottom crop set without having to start a spray program.

Only two or three weevils have been caught in the more than 125 traps stationed in cotton counties throughout West Tennessee, as compared to an average count of three weevils per trap in 1976.

Are the weevils late in emergence from overwinter sites, or did the unusually adverse winter kill them?

Jimmy Pendergrass, University of Tennessee entomologist, feels most weevils did not survive.

Some data is available to back up this possibility. Research entomologists caught some weevils last fall right at the first freeze and experimented with them by alternating freezing and thawing. They found that the weevils had not at that time been able to evaporate the excess water from the fatty tissues they had developed. Freezing of this water in the body tissue may have killed a substantial number.

With a low over-wintered weevil population, the university is not recommending a pin-head square application, as normally. Producers are encouraged to survey their fields at least once a week for damaged squares, throughout the season.

Scouting this season can pay big dividends, since it appears fewer insecticide applications will be needed for control.

Blossom End Rot Found

Albert Rains, of Henning, home gardener, and many commercial producers of tomatoes throughout the county have had real problems with blossom end rot this year.

This condition is caused by the lack of even moisture, or too much moisture, along with low calcium absorption.

Home gardeners who have only a few plants can eliminate this problem by watering well once a week and applying quick acting calcium (lime) to the tomato plants.

To Swine Disease Meeting

Clyde Holder and his son, Marshall, plan to attend the University of Tennessee special clinic on swine diseases to be held next month at the West Tennessee Experiment Station in Jackson.

Dr. Ralph Hall, Extension veterinarian, and other veterinarians will bring producers up to date on the use of the antibiotic rinitis vaccine, now cleared for use on baby pigs.

Detailed reports on other diseases will be given those attending.

Swine producers interested in this meeting may reserve a place by calling the County Extension Office, 635-5551, by June 28th.

The meeting will be at 6:30 p.m. July 21st.

Waiting For His Harp

Bill Butner is waiting for his harp to get to the kind that costs $8,000 and must be ordered three years in advance from Chicago, Ill., the only place harps are hand carved and painted.

Butner, a Riplian now residing in Memphis, is near the end of his 3-year wait.

His harp should be ready this summer.

He plans to drive to Chicago to get it.

"After three years, you just don't trust some truck to deliver it," he says.

It will travel the same way the harp that he uses now does—in the rear of a station wagon, on its own mattress.

He thinks he is the only male harpist in the Mid South.

He has studied the 47-stringed, 7-pedaled instrument for three years with Mrs. Agnes Criswell and Mrs. Ruth Moore Cobb.

He also plays the piano, organ, mandolin, guitar, and bass, but the harp interests him most.

His parents performed with the Grand Ole Opry in Nashville before his birth, and he is continuing the family tradition.

He plays regularly with the Shelby State College Orchestra and the Germantown Symphony, plays for religious services and weddings, and will soon perform with the singer, Marguerite Piazza.

He performed Saturday at the Miss Tennessee Pageant in Jackson, in which Suzanne Morris, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Morris, of Ripley, represented the University of Tennessee in Martin.

His wife, Harriet, a music teacher in Memphis city schools, often accompanies him on the flute.

He is a federal civil servant at the University of Tennessee. He is presently a budget analyst with the Naval Reserve Readiness Command at the Naval Air Station in Millington.

Fennel is employed by First Tennessee PCA, of Memphis.

He will receive a bachelor of science degree in agriculture next spring from the University of Tennessee in Martin.

Mrs. Brown Dies; H.D. Club Leader

Mrs. Rose Love Brown, 69, of Ripley, widow of George P. Brown, Jr., died Sunday in Baptist Hospital in Memphis.

Services were at 2 p.m. Tuesday in First Baptist Church, in which she had been active. Burial was in Memorial Gardens.

A talented home-maker and gardener, she had been a leader in home demonstration clubs in the county and on the club's County Council.

A sunny disposition and unfading eagerness to aid others won her many friends.

She leaves a son, George P. Brown III, and a daughter, Mrs. Betty Brown Smith, both of Ripley.

Pioneers' Willow Furniture Skills Remain In Use Near Murray, Ky.

George Beard, of near Murray, Ky., is determined to keep alive the almost-forgotten pioneer art of making willow furniture.

Beard and his family hand-craft a variety of ornate chairs, tables, and other items out of the pliable wood in an outdoor workshop behind an old log cabin just east of Murray. He believes the operation unique in Kentucky.

Two hundred years ago, willow furniture was common in frontier cabins. Pioneer craftsmen had a ready supply of red, black, and white willow which grew in abundance along stream banks. But as furniture-making became more mechanized and stands of willow diminished, the skill of willow-working was almost forgotten.

"I'm trying to make sure that it's remembered," Beard told Berry Craig, of the Paducah Sun-Democrat, whose story about Beard was picked up and distributed by The Associated Press.

Beard is teaching his wife and children the art of willow-working.

"There's a scarcity of wood for the furniture. Beard gets it now in Muhlenberg County, on the banks of the Green River.

"We make it a family affair," he says. "My wife, children, and son-in-law go along."

Armed with machetes, they chop down the tallest, straightest trees they can find and pile them into a pick-up truck.

Beard prefers hand tools for his furniture-making.

"I use mainly hammers, nails, and a pair of clipper-nails, and a pair of scissors. Modern technology is a chain saw."

Conspicuously absent from his tool box is any measuring device.

"All of the ideas for my pieces are up here," he says, pointing to his head.

"The furniture attracts a lot of tourists, as well as local people," Beard says.

Willow furniture, he says, will last almost indefinitely.

"There's an elderly lady who lives south of Murray who has some pieces that are well over a century old, and they're still sturdy," he says.

He says the furniture should be left in its natural state.

"After a while, you might apply a coat or two of varnish or shellac, but I wouldn't recommend painting it."

Beard says he doesn't want to "rip anybody off," so he doesn't charge much for his work.

But this winter, he plans to restore the old cabin and open it as a furniture-making shop.

"I plan to go into working with hickory then," he says.

"That's another pioneer art that's largely forgotten."

Fort Diggers, Rich In Bitters Bottles, Resume Hunt For Civil War Barracks

Dr. Robert C. Mainfort, Jr., field archaeologist with the state Division of Archaeology, and a crew of ten, including several from this county, are scheduled to begin a 10-week dig in the Fort Pillow State Historical Area July 15th.

Work Dr. Mainfort headed last summer yielded much information about the construction of the fort, which was made famous by its capture—in what the North called a "massacre"—by Confederate Gen. Nathan Bedford Forrest in April, 1864. It also recovered a number of Civil War artifacts, including bullets, bottles, and ration cans.

Analysis of these artifacts and of different soil zones has established exact location of two pieces of artillery—a 12-pound howitzer and a 6-lb. James rifle.

A variety of bullets, some for weapons as primitive as muskets and others very similar to those for modern rifles, were found last summer.

So were fragments of many patent medicine bottles.

"Many of these bottles once contained a 'cure-all' known as Dr. J. Hostetter's Bitters," Dr. Mainfort says.

"Although of doubtful medicinal value, its high alcoholic content—more than 90 proof—must have raised the spirits of many a sick soldier."

The major goal of this summer's work is to establish the location of the soldiers' barracks and the west end of the fort, and to document additional artillery emplacements.

Interested individuals are invited to visit the excavations between 7:30 a.m. and 4 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Agree, a trusty, had keys to all the sites.

Miss Webb charged he unlocked her cell, accosted her, and attempted to rape her.

Five prisoners—Mike Dowdy, Mike Pike, Paul Sampson, Bob Swift, and Tony Victory—testified they heard no noise nor screams from Miss Webb's cell.

Agree took the witness stand to deny entering her cell.

Agree was serving 11 months and 29 days for involuntary manslaughter in the fatal shooting of Ernest Don Lents, of Halls, in August, 1975.

He was released from jail in March and had been free on bond awaiting Tuesday's trial.

Cattle Sales Run $189 Per Head

Tennessee cattlemen sold 11,882 head of graded feeder cattle at ten sales this spring for an average price of $189.12 per head, reports Emmitt L. Rawls, University of Tennessee Extension livestock marketing specialist.

"Prices on all calves averaged $3.40/cwt. less than last spring, but average weights were 29 pounds heavier," he explains. "Average value per head was nearly the same as the $189.30 in April of 1976. The sales grossed $2.2 million, or about $700,000 more than in 1976."

The 11,882 head marketed represented an increase of 36 percent, or 45 percent more than last year. According to Rawls, shorter forage supplies probably contributed to the increased marketings.

"Buyers seemed to prefer calves weighing under 500 pounds that were suitable for grazing," adds Rawls. "Premiums for calves weighing under 500 pounds ranged from $2-7/cwt. over calves weighing 1977 DATSUN'S DRIVER, B. F. Klinkhammer, of 720 Tucker, Dyersburg, was hospitalized with multiple injuries after his vehicle struck the rear of a station wagon he was passing on New Highway 51 at its intersection with Volz Road near Ripley at 4:35 p.m. Saturday. The station wagon's driver, Mrs. Tommy Garner, of Ripley, was uninjured. Both vehicles were northbound. Highway patrolman Joe Jacobs charged Klinkhammer with failure to maintain control of his vehicle.

Cattle Sales Run $189 Per Head Teachers Attend Aerospace Class

Mrs. Sarah Martin, of Henning, and Mrs. Fay C. Williams, of Ripley, are among 40 West Tennessee teachers attending the 15th Aerospace Education Workshop this week and the next two weeks at Memphis State University.

The course is intended to bring teachers up to date on advances in aeronautics and education, so they can incorporate the information into classroom subjects.

Teachers will have the opportunity to fly a small aircraft with a licensed instructor and will visit the Memphis Airport, the Federal Express Co., the Memphis Area Aviation Technical School, the Naval Aviation Museum in Pensacola, Fla., and the aircraft carrier Lexington.

Over 500 pupils. Mismatched calves brought about $30 less per head than graded calves.

"The calves sold in the sales did bring a premium over most auction-run cattle. The general level of feeder prices continued to increase through late April, but have since declined in response to a somewhat weaker-fed slaughter market."

REPORTS FROM WASHINGTON

During the past two weeks, action in the House Ways and Means Committee on several of President Carter's energy proposals has been very fast. In recent weeks, the committee has begun its mark-up session on segments of the energy proposal that pertains to taxes.

With very little discussion, the Ways and Means Committee first rejected the President's proposal for standby authority to increase taxes on gasoline beginning in 1979. As you may remember, that proposal centered on the request to allow the President to impose an additional five cents per gallon tax on gasoline before the end of the current conservation standards were not met. In addition to rejecting this proposal, the committee also turned down another proposal to increase the gas tax by three cents in 1978.

A traditional gas guzzler tax package goes on to the Senate for consideration there. It is my understanding that the House leadership wants to bring the entire energy package to the House for debate and for a vote this fall. It will probably take the additional three months to finish the necessary work and get the energy policy bill put together into one package.

MR. AND MRS. WYMOND HURT celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary June 12th with Open House at their home on West Main Street at Halls. In the receiving line with Mr. and Mrs. Hurt to welcome the more than 200 guests were their son, Wymond Hurt, Jr., of Memphis, and his recent bride. For the event "Pat" had chosen a full length blue voile dress with old fashioned lines. It featured a wide lace yoke edged with lace ruffle and high neck-line, long sleeves with ruffles at her hands, and a full skirt with a wide ruffle at the hemline. Her daughter-in-law wore a blue crepe dress with Princess line. Each wore a gold cymbidium orchid pinned at her shoulder.

The Hurt home was filled with gift arrangements of flowers, all in gold tones. The dining room table was covered with an imported embroidered cloth. The centerpiece was a five-branched silver candelabra with gold candles, roses, carnations, and baby's breath. At one end of the table was a five-tiered cake, decorated with gold roses and topped with a bell decoration with a big gold "50" at the center. At the other end golden punch was served from a silver punch bowl. Nuts and mints with "50" on them were served from silver compotes.

Assisting with the serving were Mrs. Marvin Hansford, Misses Jennifer and Lou Ann Hansford, Mrs. David Hurt, Mrs. Billy Spence, Mrs. R. J. Nunn, Mrs. Charles Alsobrook, and Mrs. Jim Horner, of Dyersburg. Each wore a corsage of roses.

After being served the guests were invited into the den to see the Hurts' honeymoon album of pictures taken in 1927 in Yellowstone National Park.

Mrs. Charles Moore entertained at the piano throughout the afternoon. Mrs. Alma Bullock read poems which she had written and read at Mrs. Hurt's shower at the time of her marriage.

Out-of-town guests included Mr. and Mrs. Harold Hurt, Mrs. Paul Griffin, Miss Marietta Griffin, Mrs. Bedford Calhoun, Mrs. Frank Williams, and Fletcher Hurt, all of Memphis; Mrs. and Mrs. Floyd C. Hurt, Mrs. Jim Ewell, Mrs. Tom Canada, Mr. and Mrs. Burrell Jernigan, and Mrs. Wiley Perry, all of Dyersburg.

Mr. and Mrs. Hal Pennington, Mike Pennington, Bill Kelley, Mrs. Annie Lee Lucas, Mrs. Fay Coffman, Mr. and Mrs. R. V. Lilley, Mrs. Louise Pearson, Mrs. Mabel Humphreys, and Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Griffin, all of Gates;

Mr. and Mrs. Vernon McBride, Jr., Miss Barbara Jo McBride, Mr. and Mrs. Norfleet Anthony, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Carter, Mrs. Edric Owen, Jr., and Mrs. Richard Owen, all of Ripley; Mrs. J. M. Riddick and Mrs. William Conyers, both of Maury City; and little Heather Nunn, of Camarillo, Calif., granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Nunn.

BEAUTY SPOT

Two planters of purple achimenes (commonly known as Methodist plants), many varieties of blooming pot plants, and live-bearing baskets on the porch at the home of Mrs. Enos Thurmond and Miss Emily Thurmond on East Main Street were chosen this week for the Halls Garden Club beauty spot sign.

The events will include country and western music by Ray Prescott and His Ramblers, square dancing, and plenty of drinks. More than $1,000 worth of free merchandise will be given away at 4:30 p.m.

Allied Chemical's revolutionary foliar fertilizer for soybeans.

We have been selected as a FOLIAN™ dealer. It gives us a brand new way to make your soybean acres more productive.

With a good stand, proper management and FOLIAN, you can get 10-20% better yields. Latest field tests just completed in Brazil showed a 22% yield increase. Five seasons of testing have proven FOLIAN can return $2 for every $1 invested.

FOLIAN works by getting enough extra nutrients into soybeans during pod filling to enable more beans to fill to harvestable size. Nothing else has proven so effective or practical. A single aerial or ground application from early to mid pod is all it takes.

Talk to us now to see if your soybeans are candidates for FOLIAN. It's too good of an opportunity to let it pass by.

State Near Fateful Choices, Its Newest Historian Says

Wilma Dykeman Stokely has come to be known as Tennessee's modern historian, since last year's publication of her book, "Tennessee: A Bicentennial History."

But when she came to Nashville last month to be honored by Gov. Ray Blanton, she was just as concerned about the state's future as its past.

"We are at a watershed in our state and in our region," she told The Associated Press. "We still have some balance here, we can still make some choices here—trying to preserve some of the history and the natural and human resources."

For Wilma Dykeman—the name she uses for her books—it is a time for heroes—those who "consider another generation."

She is quick to name the heroes of Tennessee's past.

"Andrew Johnson, for one. He was the first to make public education work in Tennessee."

"We appropriated money for colleges and universities, but he was the first to make the public school system work, and that's the basis of a real democracy."

Her book, a 200-page concise, evocative history, was the latest in a series of works she has produced from her home in the East Tennessee mountains of Cocke County.

"I thought it couldn't be done," she said of the assignment for a short, all-inclusive history.

"But I had 35 years of collected anecdotes, stories, and folklore, and I thought it was such an interesting challenge."

Elegant in a bitter lemon linen suit and wide-brimmed straw hat, she seemed more the cosmopolitan world traveler, whose passport is indeed stamped with China, than a woman whose life is centered in the Appalachians of East Tennessee.

One of her new projects is a book on Southern Appalachian literature.

"Emma Bell Miles was an artistic woman from Chattanooga, who married a mountain man, moved with him to Walden's Ridge, and wrote with such insight of the mountain people," she says.

"And her book, 'The Spirit of the Mountains,' is not sentimental, it's utter realism."

In much the same fashion, the young Wilma Dykeman, as a university-educated Asheville, N.C., woman, abandoned her plans of moving to New York to open the theater department of Miss Finch's School.

Instead, through the family of the writer, Thomas Wolfe, she was introduced to a young Tennessee man whose ancestors go back to the state's earliest pioneer days and whose more recent forebears made a fortune canning vegetables.

She married James Stokely and moved to his home in Newport in Cocke County, in the East-Tennessee mountains.

She adopted the state and has been writing about the region ever since.

At age 57, she has been the recipient of a Guggenheim Fellowship, the Thomas Wolfe Memorial Award for the best book of the year on world peace, race relations, or civil liberties.

She shared that prize with her husband for their book, "Neither Black nor White."

She was one of the first authors chosen to write a state history by the Nashville-based American Association for State and Local History, which has charge of the federally-funded project to publish new histories of each state.

It's the relationship with the land that Wilma Dykeman, a veteran conservationist, sees as one of the common threads through the "three states" of Tennessee.

"Sometimes it has been a tragic, a wasteful relationship. We loved the land, and yet we destroyed it. We thought it was limitless.

"Yet even when we became an urban state, as we are now, in attitudes and culture and folk-lore, we are still a rural people."

And if coal is king under the new energy plan sought by President Carter, what will happen to her beloved Appalachia?

"I can't help but believe that a society that can put a foot on the moon can find a way to get coal out of the earth without ruining the land and human life, if we commit ourselves to doing it."
